IRRIGATION AND THE DOMINION RECLAMATION SERVICE

(By E. F. Drake, Director of the Reclamation Service.)
As its name indicates, the "raison d'être" of the "Reclamation Service," a branch of the Department of the Interior, is to facilitate the reclamation of semi-arid, or swampy lands, so as to make them available for settlement and productive cultivation. Its work is chiefly confined to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the northerly half of Manitoba where, under the "Irrigation Act," the Dominion government controls all the sources of surface water supply and prescribes the procedure for the acquiring of right to the use of water.

The work may be classified roughly in four main divisions: (1) Stream Measurement; (2) Irrigation; (3) Drainage, and (4) Domestic and Industrial Water Supply.

Stream Measurement

The Dominion government has, under the Irrigation Act, asserted its ownership of the sources of surface water supply as trust to be administered for the benefit of the public. Obviously the proper administration of this trust requires a comprehensive knowledge of the nature and extent of the water supply. This knowledge can be obtained only by systematic measurement and observation which, in order to be reasonably accurate, must extend over a period of many years. Systematic stream measurement, technically known as hydrographic surveys, was begun on a small scale in 1909 and has been carried on continuously since, the scope of the work being extended year by year as funds are made available. The work was at first confined chiefly to those districts in which irrigation was practised, but has since been gradually extended to cover the more important streams throughout these provinces.

The importance of the work of systematic stream measurement has never been fully appreciated by the public. It is the basis of all water administration. It would be just as sensible for a merchant to issue cheques without an accurate knowledge of his bank balance as for the government to issue licenses to divert and use water without knowing the quantity of water available for use. The work is exacting, and often, especially in winter, subjects the observer to severe hardships. Measuring the flow of an ice-bound river, at a temperature of 45 deg. is far from pleasant. But space will not permit of more extended reference except to say that in its relationship to the other phases of the work of the Reclamation Service, stream measurement is the foundation upon which all must rest. The foundation must be sound if the structure is to endure.

Irrigation

Canada has no considerable area of "arid" land, in the sense in which that word is generally used, but there is in Southern Alberta and Southern Saskatchewan a district comprising some 84,000 square miles—or over 50,000,000 acres—in which the climatic conditions make irrigation necessary, or at least desirable as a form of crop insurance. For convenience this district is called "semi-arid." The cause is the uncertain and often scanty precipitation, which varies from 6 to 34 inches annually and from 5 to 30 inches during the growing season from May 1 to September 30, which is sufficient in "lean" years for satisfactory crop production.

The most effective remedy is irrigation, where possible, and it is one of the chief duties of the Reclamation Service to determine by careful surveys how the water supply may best be regulated and controlled and applied to the land for irrigation. This involves careful study of each watershed or drainage basin, the location and survey of reservoirs for the storage of flood waters, topographical surveys to determine the location and areas of tracts suitable for irrigation, and further surveys to lay out canals to carry the water to the land.

As the land is very largely in private ownership, and as the benefits of increased productivity under irrigation will primarily inure to the owners, and secondarily, to the province, in the form of increased taxable value, the Dominion government's responsibilities have been held to extend only to the stream measurement and survey work previously mentioned, and to such engineering advice and assistance as the locally interested landowners, or the provincial governments may request when actual development work is undertaken.

Surveys made in the early nineties—about, or shortly after the time of the enactment of the first irrigation law—have led to the construction of several large irrigation projects now in partial operation, which have resulted in the effective reclamation of large areas of land formerly considered fit only for grazing. URGES THE LIFTING OF EMBARGO AGAINST CANADIAN CATTLE

Hon. Manning Doherty, minister of agriculture in the Drury cabinet, scored heavily when he discussed with Imperial Press representatives around the banquet table at Guelph Agricultural College, the question of a British embargo against Canadian cattle. Those members of the press conference who came from Great Britain are well acquainted with the British end of the argument. Mr. Doherty told them some things about the Canadian end.

While the minister's statements could not be said to be exactly the usual pleasant after-dinner oratory, such as the pressmen have been accustomed to, they were none the less interesting. The British pressmen can gather from what Mr. Doherty said, that in Canada public opinion is much opposed to this long-standing embargo, for at least two reasons. One of these is that it places an unfair stigma upon Canadian cattle, the natural assumption being that it is there because cattle from Canada are diseased or likely to be. It is urged that the embargo should be much as this is not true, Mr. Doherty removed. On the other hand, if, as is generally believed, Canadian cattle are being barred from Britain for the purpose of affording protection to British cattlemen, it is contended that the fairer thing to do would be to enforce a prohibitive tariff against imported cattle.

An interesting suggestion from the minister was that Britain should quit spending large sums of money to encourage agriculture in the homeland and transfer that expenditure to Canada, where the British government might buy good land and establish English and Scotch farmers on it. If production for the purposes of the homeland population was what was aimed at, he believed the Canadian farm idea would bring better results. It may be so, but we can not imagine a British government willingly giving up the homeland greater production campaign that proved so effective during the war and that has brought so much increased prosperity to the British farming community.

struction of the works enumerated in the foregoing table, there was a considerable interval of time during which no further large work of this nature was undertaken. This was due, primarily, to a succession of wet years which somewhat dampened the ardor of prospective irrigators, as well as to the fact that further surveys of this kind were not urgently required, pending the actual completion and operation of these projects then under construction.

Within the last five years, however, a considerable amount of similar work has been undertaken, for the purpose of demonstrating the feasibility of reclaiming other large areas of similarly unproductive land. These surveys comprise:

DEATH OF MRS. MARGARET E. CARTWRIGHT

Another old timer passed peacefully away on Monday evening in the person of Mrs. Margaret E. Cartwright. She was well known by every old-time resident, having come to the country in 1884. Mrs. Cartwright has been in indifferent health for the past three years, having never been strong since the death of her grandson, Thomas Dowson, who was killed at Paschendale in November, 1917.

The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon from Christ Church, and from there to the Union Cemetery.

Mrs. Cartwright leaves to daughters and three grandchildren to mourn her loss.

PRESENTATION TO MR. AND MRS. R. COTTOM

A very pleasant surprise party took place on Saturday evening when a few of the friends from the Presbyterian church called in to say goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. R. Cotton, who have been members of the church for the past eleven years and who are leaving Macleod to take up their residence in Calgary. As the guests were aware that much of the packing was done they each brought along their own chair, cup and saucer. The evening was spent in social fellowship, and after refreshments were served Mrs. J. Ringland, on behalf of the congregation and workers of the church, presented Mr. and Mrs. Cotton with an address and a beautiful cut glass water set. Mr. R. Cotton has been with the Great West Saddlery Company and a resident of Macleod for eleven years, and with the other members of his family has always taken a keen interest in the affairs of St. Andrew's church.

The following is the text of the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Cotton:

While there is universal regret expressed by the people of Macleod at your departure, the members of St. Andrews Church feel that the loss to them is the greatest. During the eleven years you have been here you have won the respect of the whole community by your consistent Christian characters and we lose good citizens. In the church we will miss you greatly, for you and your family have been helpers in all the branches of work. So faithful and constant, always to be depended upon, and slow to take offence. While you will doubtless feel it a privilege to work in any church and help in the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour we would fain have had you continue to work with us. We assure you of a secure place in our affection and esteem, and we ask you to accept of this small gift, as we want you to have something in your home to remind you of the happy days you spent in St. Andrews in Macleod.

We pray that God, who doubtless has work for you to do for Him elsewhere, may give you much joy and prosperity in the days to come. (Sgd.) Members St. Andrews Church

29 LIVES LOST IN WEEK ON LAKE SUPERIOR

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., Aug. 21.—The lives of 29 persons, one of them a woman, are believed to have been lost shortly after 9 o'clock last night when the steamer Superior City, a freighter, sunk four and one-half miles northeast of Whitefish Point in Lake Superior after colliding with the steamer Willis L. King.

Four members of the crew, including Capt. Edward Sawyers of Albion, Mich., were saved. Names of the missing could not be learned today, as all records of the Superior City were lost.

The missing woman is known to have been the wife of the second engineer.—Morning Albertan.

D. G. MACKENZIE WINS GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Word has been received by J. W. Macdonald from D. G. McKenzie who is now in Scotland, that Mr. McKenzie was successful in winning the Gold Medal at the Gullane Gold Club championship tournament, with a score of 74. He was also the runner-up in the Morton Hall Golf Club championship with a score of 78 as against his opponent's 74.

MUD LAKE ITEMS

The dance at Mud Lake on August 12th last was a great success. A record crowd was on hand to enjoy themselves. Mr. R. W. Smith's orchestra was in attendance and everybody had a good time.

Miss Matheson opened school at Mud Lake on Monday, August 16th.

The binders are busy at Mud Lake and every one is going around with a smile. J. Henry paid a visit to the district last Sunday and he promised to be on the job with his Hart Parr and Twin City thresher when needed.

The telephone poles are nearly all up and it looks like Mud Lake is going to have a phone service at last, even if it is only a pay station.

MRS. D. C. COLEMAN DROWNED IN LAKE WINDERMERE, B.C.

We regret to report the death by drowning of Mrs. D'Alton C. Coleman, wife of D. C. Coleman, vice-president of the C. P. R. western lines. This sad event took place Tuesday morning at Lake Windermere, British Columbia.

So far the Canadian Pacific officials here have only received but the most meagre details. It would appear that Mrs. Coleman, who had recently joined the summer camp at Lake Windermere, went out this morning for a swim and the assumption is that the lady was suddenly seized with cramps and was drowned before assistance could be rendered.

Well-Known in Calgary

Mrs. Coleman was well-known to a large circle of friends in Calgary, having resided here for about two years when her husband was the general superintendent of the Alberta division of the C. P. R.

The deceased lady was most popular and took an active part in the welcome given to the Imperial Press delegates when they visited Lake Windermere on Monday, presenting the prizes for the best costumes amongst the Indians who had gathered for the occasion.

Up to time of writing the body had not been recovered.

TRUE TO TRADITION

The provincial police are upholding the high standard set in the past by the old "Mounties," and while both they and the mounted policeman, Corporal Usher, underestimated the train bandits, whom they were attempting to arrest, no criticism can be possible of the manner in which the attempt was made.

A U.S. marshall would have shot first and ordered hands up after his man was got, but such is not and never has been the Canadian practice, and while occasionally valuable lives have been lost by sticking staunchly to legal methods, it is very unlikely that either the R.C.M. Police or the A.P. Police will ever resort to American methods, at least until the criminals are known as these Austrians are now known to be bad men and desperadoes.—Calgary Herald.

GERMAN SOVIETS SEIZE DOCKS

PARIS, Aug. 23.—German workers at Danzig have established Soviets and have seized the docks, preventing the landing of any supplies for Poland, according to a report from that city. The German commander of the port is said to have refused to assign moorings for the French dispatch boat Accra and the cruiser Gueydon.

Sir Reginald Tower, high commissioner for the League of Nations at Danzig has refused to take any responsibility, declaring he must wait instructions from London.—Calgary Herald.

METHODIST CHURCH

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the Methodist church at 11 a.m. on Sunday. The usual evening service will be held on the parsonage lawn at 7:30. The quarterly official board will meet on Monday evening at 8:30, a full attendance is requested. Rev. W. A. Lewis, pastor.

TOM MOORE—TRAMP—HAS VALET IN NEW GOLDWYN PICTURE

That a tramp with a valet is an anomaly everyone will agree. A masculine motion picture star without one is even more of a rarity. Yet, Tom Moore as a star in Goldwyn pictures hasn't a valet or an attendant of any kind. But as Frank Melbury, a derelict, in "The City of Comrades," he has in the person of "Lover" (played by Otto Hoffman), a champion who is a more faithful valet than can be found in any millionaire's palace. It is a curious association, "Lover," a tramp by inclination and desire, surrounds Frank with a devotion that is dog-like; yet without it is not a good influence. For his devotion Frank has to pay a loss of character. The old man encourages him to drink, to give way to every temptation, to resist the promptings of conscience, to descend from rather than to regain the position he has lost. Yet in return he gives genuine devotion even though it is selfish.

Events change the lives of both. Frank rehabilitates himself despite the efforts of "Lover" to prevent it and when he puts behind him the old life it means everything but "Lover." He sticks, himself reformed through sheer devotion, and instead of giving that affection, the only tangible evidence of which was constant companionship, he becomes Frank's valet.

At that star of "The City of Comrades," which comes to the Empress Theatre beginning Friday and Saturday has not changed his inflexible views on the subject of valets they're superfluous.

SUNFLOWER ENSILAGE

(By G. H. Hutton in "Agricultural Alberta.")

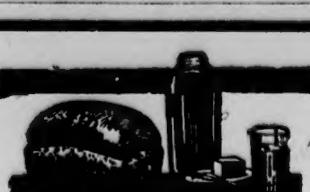

In the current issue of "Agricultural Alberta" Mr. G. H. Hutton, of the C. P. R. gives an account of his experience with sunflowers as ensilage. He says in making preparation for the crop the ground was well worked as for corn and had received an application of barnyard manure during the previous winter and the crop was seeded during the first ten days of May. As a general rule it might be stated that seeding during the first half of May may be expected to give the best results. I believe that most seed houses carry a supply of sunflower seed on hand. The variety most in demand at the present time, and which we used in this work was the Russian Giant, seeded at the rate of about 15 lbs. per acre, using an ordinary grain drill, stopping up the necessary spouts in order to sow in rows about three feet apart. The distance of the seed in the row was such that plants were produced at an average distance apart in the row of from three to four inches which would appear to be about the right distance. The crop was cultivated during the season in the same manner as the corn crop is treated and cut with the corn binder when the seed has reached the dough stage.

The sunflower crop made a growth of about fourteen feet in height and was put into the silo immediately after being cut down, the yield weighing 34.6 tons to the acre in comparison with 14 tons of corn and 7 tons of peas and oats, all under similar conditions. Wagons equipped with flat racks were used for hauling to the silo, and a 12 in. Massey-Harris "Blizzard" ensilage cutter and blower made by a 20 H.P. engine would be satisfactory for cutting and blowing into the silo. This machine cuts all fodder into short lengths, the average being probably about $\frac{3}{4}$ in., but depends upon the angle at which the knife strikes the stalk. I believe that an engine of much less capacity would serve for the purpose provided it developed 15 H.P.

In figuring the most desirable size for silos, it would be well to estimate the cubic foot of sunflower silage as weighing about 50 lbs. and the average weight for sunflower, corn or peas and oats silage at about 45 lbs. when put into a silo 40 ft. high. Then estimate the average daily consumption per mature cattle beast as being about 30 lbs. in conjunction with straw or hay once daily. It is not to be understood that rapid gains will be made by beef cattle, or that dairy cattle will maintain a heavy milk flow without feeding the usual ration of grain in conjunction with silage. The size of the silo should be based on the size of the herd, building.

It is not thought advisable to grow sunflowers and cure in the field as corn is sometimes handled, for the reason that they become very woody though no definite information is now at hand as to the loss in feeding value when this crop is so handled.

The crop is considered the best dry land cultivated crop for silage purposes, and will extend the area where heavy yielding crops can be grown because sunflowers resist frost better than corn. It is also a highly suitable crop under irrigation, though during this last year the crop on the Demonstration Farm at Strathmore was irrigated but once. It is believed that under average conditions with irrigation, a yield of twenty tons per acre may be expected throughout Western Canada.

ciation nor for overtime. An application of business methods, therefore, to farming in Kansas, shows that in 1919 wheat growing, despite the high price of wheat, was conducted at a loss, estimated over the whole of the business field. Even if it be taken into consideration that the farmer is building a home as well as a business, and that part of his investment represents his home, it is palpably obvious that on the average, the grain grower, in 1919 worked entirely for the benefit of somebody else; he didn't even make as much as he paid his hired help.

There has been much discussion as to the profitability or unprofitability of grain growing as a whole, and it is unfortunate that farmers do not as a rule keep account of their business affairs. Before the war it was very generally agreed among those who had gone into the matter that wheat at 75 or 80 cents barely covered cost of production. If the present cost of production in Kansas may be accepted, even with reasonable modification for Western Canada, it is obvious, the Grain Grower's Guide argues, that every fall in the price of wheat means more to the western grain grower than has been generally estimated, and the necessity for those reforms which would reduce the farmer's cost become increasingly urgent.—Lethbridge Herald.

CONVERSATION

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 26.—(P.M. Mail.)—Nowhere has the high cost of living been felt more keenly than in Turkish harems. Men who were formerly able to maintain many wives and concubines find their incomes insufficient to keep up large establishments and are forced to turn some of the women adrift.

American women relief workers who have been investigating social and economic conditions say the tragedies Turkish women have undergone as a result of the war are even worse than in other European countries because of their utter helplessness of women and their lack of training which might make them self-supporting.

The sufferings of Moslem women are worse in cities than in the country, for the country women are frequently trained to do farm work and are an asset to their husbands rather than a liability. Furthermore the economic conditions have not been disturbed so seriously in rural districts. Farming goes on much as usual. Women can find employment in olive groves, at silk culture, in fruit orchards and even in grain fields.

Since the war has robbed so many women of the husbands, fathers or other male relatives upon whom they were dependent, many city women have forced themselves into employment which was never before regarded as proper for Moslem women. Turkish women with their veils thrown back from their faces may now be seen as saleswomen in scores of Constantinople shops. They are even employed as street sweepers.

There has been a great outcry against Moslem women accepting employment which forces them into association with men, especially Christian men, but the economic pressure has been so strong that religious prejudices had to make way. The need for nurses with the army gave Moslem women their first opportunity to get hospital training and become nurses. That was the entering wedge which has opened the way into other employments monopolized by Greek and Armenian women. Turkish women may now be found in telephone exchanges. They are acting as cashiers, janitors and even street car conductors.

Stern necessity has won for Turkish women an independence which was undreamed of six years ago, and the wail of the untrained women forced to earn their livelihood has aroused Turkish leaders to a realization of the necessity for better and more practical education for women.—Lethbridge Herald.

ALBERTA MAY LOSE $20,000 ON BOND SALE

TORONTO, Aug. 21.—The action of Hon. C. R. Mitchell of the province of Alberta in accepting the second highest tender for the block of $2,000,000 bonds recently offered for competitive bids, is occasioning a good deal of comment in local bond circles. It is maintained by bond dealers, some of whom were in competition for the bonds, that there was no reason, aside from a misunderstanding on the part of the provincial treasurer of the terms of the tender, for the non-acceptance of the highest bid, entailing as it did, the loss of $20,000 to the province.

The clause in the tender submitted by R. A. Daly and Company and W. A. MacKenzie and Company, who bid one per cent. more than any of the other tenderers which gave rise to objection on the part of the Hon. Mr. Mitchell, is as follows:

"That we be given 15 days' time from the acceptance of this tender to take up the first $1,000,000 of the issue. The remaining $1,000,000 to be taken up within thirty days from the acceptance of this tender."

Prominent bond dealers of the city who were present when the tenders were opened and who heard the conditions attached to all six of the tenders say that this was not an uncommon stipulation and are of the opinion that Mr. Mitchell was laboring under a misapprehension or he would not have passed over the highest tender.

THE RISE OF MEIGHEN

(By J. K. Munroe in Maclean's Magazine.)

The political wheel has taken another turn.

Just a month ago Sir Robert Borden had slipped back into his place looking healthy, well groomed and at peace with all the world. It looked on the surface as if the Union government had resumed its general drift towards the 1922 and dissolution with nothing but distant mutterings to disturb its solemn and dignified calm. Not by word of mouth had the Premier indicated even to his colleagues in the Cabinet that he had the slightest intention of shuffling off the political coil.

Today there is a new King in Ottawa. Hon. Arthur Meighen, who twelve years ago was a struggling young lawyer in Portage la Prairie, wields the sceptre. Everything is changed except the general drift. That goes on and on and continues to be the Union government's only asset. But pardon the slip of the pen. It is no longer the Union government. It is now the administration of the party. One of the last edicts of the good Sir Robert changed the name. But it is the old case of the rose under any other name refusing to give off a different odor. For the Cabinet contains the same old faces with one notable exception. Hon. Wesley Rowell has packed his uplift in his little truck and moved into a more congenial atmosphere. Of course Hon. Martin Burrill has also retreated to the parliamentary library. But he'll create quite as much stir there as he did on the Treasury benches. For Hon. Martin is an inoffensive chap, a thorough English gentleman who plays a nice game of golf, but who will slip out of the political scenery without leaving even a vacancy that must be filled.

A Real Caucus This
But all this is ahead of the story. That story starts like some other chunks of Canadian history, with July 1st. Through the previous weeks, while the statesmen were spending millions for the country and picking off a trifling for themselves in the shape of increased indemnities, Sir Robert had intimated once or twice that the boys should stick around as there was to be a real live little caucus after the show in the big tent had closed down. Most of them stayed, more out of curiosity than for any fixed idea that anything would happen. They had become so accustomed to Sir Robert resigning and being coaxed back into the harness by the tears and cheers of the caucus that they rather looked on the whole performance as a bit of a bore. But they owed something to a Premier who had just granted a raise of wages all round. So they stuck and the Dominion Day caucus was somewhat of a success in regard to attendance. And those members who drowded through the early part of Sir Robert's hour long address sat up and began to rub their eyes towards the finish. Then and not till then did it dawn on them that their ailing chief intended to resign and to stay resigned. For once in his life Sir Robert spoke in tones that none could fail to understand. He told of his failing health, that he might bear up under the burdens of office for a month or two or even a year or two but that the break must come sooner or later. It might come during a campaign or on the brink of an election. Twere better far to do their parting now than to postpone it till perhaps he was in the hospital and themselves in the throes of political dissolution.

For once the voice of entreaty was hushed. There was none so selfish as to ask his self-sacrificing chief to again lay himself on the alter of his country. Even good old Sir George Foster, the leader of the sub chorus, dried his eyes as he reflected that the man who was as much a casualty of the war as if he had stood in the front line trenches was entitled to demobilization now that peace had settled over a troubled world. Moreover, everybody was too busy wondering who the new Premier would be to give much thought to the old one. The dead one has to be satisfied with a notice in the obituary column and a nice tombstone.

The Tories Take a Hand

Anyway that leadership problem was so perplexing that the caucus took a couple of hours off to think it over. Parliament was prorogued as they thought but that did not interfere with profundity. It is one of the jobs for which a grateful country pays its Governor-General.

Back in the caucus room the Cabinet made its first move. It obligingly suggested that it relieve the caucus of the work of selecting a successor to Sir Robert. Strange to say the old Tory element, who form about 85 per cent. of the Unionist—beg pardon National Liberal and Conservative party—demurred. They thought they were entitled to a voice in the selection. Moreover, in recent days their hearts had been troubled. They had seen their Premier swayed by Liberal-Union counsel in certain legislation 'till it looked as if he considered their feelings as secondary to those of the Liberal opposition. This was particularly noticeable in the construction of the new Franchise Act, where Hon. Hugh Guthrie of Liberal extraction and Hon. James Calder of the same ilk held frequent conferences with the cohorts of Mackenzie King and made the government following swallow the results thereof. Those Tories feared the same influence in the Premier-making. The muttered growl that went up warned the Cabinet to keep off the grass.

So they talked new policy for a time and Hon. James Calder explained the beauties of that new "National Liberal and Conservative" name. It is in sections you know. And gentle James smilingly demonstrated how it could be unjoined and taken apart to allow each section to be used in the constituency it best fitted. In a Tory hive the two front sections could be dropped. In a Grit stronghold the middle length could be used to advantage. And though Hon. James left something to be inferred it has since been pointed out the "National" has on at least one former occasion worked wonders in Quebec. A platform was of course a necessary part of the equipment, so the one Sir Robert submitted to the caucus last fall was brought down from the attic dusted a bit and labelled O.K. It may or may not have been read to the caucus. That was a working meeting and only the idle read party platforms.

While all this harmless chatter was under way the busy brains of the Cabinet were at work and when opportunity offered they had a fresh leadership proposition ready for their not too loving nor even too loyal followers. Those followers, if left to their own devices, would select Hon. Arthur Meighen as their leader. They would do this partly because he was the only Tory of suitable age and acceptable qualifications and partly because they knew he was not wanted by the rest of the Cabinet. So the proposition came from somewhere that Sir Robert Borden should exercise his prerogative and choose the name to be submitted to His Excellency but that in doing so he should be guided by letters of recommendation written by his followers and mailed to his address.

To the assembled Tories this looked like a secret ballot for the leadership and they departed wearing on their faces smiles of content and in their hearts feelings of supreme confidence that the next Premier of Canada would be a good Tory, viz, and to wit: one Arthur Meighen. But later in the evening the smiles soured and the confidence turned to something akin to consternation. For it was discovered that while Sir Robert would be guided he was by no means to be governed by the result of the ballot. In other words the letters were merely for Sir Robert's information. He would read and digest them and then go ahead and appoint whom he blooming well pleased.

White Could Have Won?
It was along about here that the wires began to hum and the old Tories started to howl. "We want Meighen" was the cry that went up from the latter, while the rest of the Cabinet hunted their political bargain counter for "something just as good." They might have found it, too, had not their intelligence department played them false. That department reported that Sir Thomas White, who sometime ago sidestepped further participation in the affairs of the nation could be coaxed back into the arena. After this information the Cabinet chorus sang an ode to White. Also they cut loose from all other candidates. They made it a straight fight between White and Meighen. They would have won too but for one little thing. That was that Sir Thomas wouldn't have this job.

Sir Thomas was dug out of the wilds of Muskoka, brought to Ottawa on a private car by the Governor-General's secretary and offered a Premiership set out on a silver salver and all tied up with pink ribbons. He pushed it away with his open hand. He would have none of it. He said he was a sick man. But at that he wasn't half as sick as the statesmen who sat around and saw all their schemes go a-glimmer—who saw Sir Thomas turn down the plum each would have given his soul to get for himself and a large part of his worldly goods to keep away from Hon. Arthur Meighen.

The Fight to Oust Meighen

It was on a Wednesday the nearest thing to Ash Wednesday Ottawa ever knew, that most of this happened. The news spread that Sir Thomas White had refused the Premiership and that all that was left was Meighen. But Sir Robert and his advisers wrestled with their grief and vainly sought for a way out. The personal advisers were Hons. Reid, Ballantyne and Calder. You'll notice that they were two-third Liberal-Union. It might also be added that they were three-thirds anti-Meighen. They met in the old East Block that has sheltered a Macdonald and a Laurier and sought to save the country from a Meighen.

So they talked new policy for a time and Hon. James Calder explained the beauties of that new "National Liberal and Conservative" name. It is in sections you know. And gentle James smilingly demonstrated how it could be unjoined and taken apart to allow each section to be used in the constituency it best fitted. In a Tory hive the two front sections could be dropped. In a Grit stronghold the middle length could be used to advantage. And though Hon. Could Have Put Over Drayton

For inside circles the suspicion still lingers that if the Cabinet had not stalked their all on Sir Thomas White they could have "put over" Sir Henry Drayton. The inventor of luxury taxes had strong outside support. He was acceptable to Quebec and there is a growing feeling in safe and sane society that if the Farmer invasion is to be stopped the two old manufacturing provinces will have to forget their racial and religious disputes and—but what is the use? They fought for White and fighting fell.

Thus was the mighty humbled and made to lick the hand of their conqueror. Thus were the wiles of a Calder set at naught by the blundering of misguided friends and failure to provide his shock force with the right kind of supports.

IRRIGATION PROBLEM
IN OTHER LANDS

Irrigation is not an Alberta problem alone. Nearly every country in the world is dealing with this matter of providing water for land that is capable of producing heavily with a sufficient amount of moisture. Irrigation projects are being advanced all over the western section of the United States. Britain is financing extensive development in Egypt and India and of course, new irrigation schemes are common in Australia. These countries realize the great advantages of reclaiming land by irrigation. Experience has proven that it is one of the best investments.

In the London Times the other day we read the following item about irrigation in Africa:

At a meeting of the African Society yesterday afternoon, Professor E. H. L. Schwarz, of South Africa, spoke on the Kalahari and its possibilities. He said that South Africa, year after year, was full of starving men and animals as the result of drought, and he propounded a scheme which aims at stopping up the gaps by which the great rivers on the north were carrying away to the sea water that used to be conserved in the interior. The scheme would give 10,000 square miles of irrigated land in place of the present rapidly spreading waste.

A resolution was adopted calling upon the government to obtain expert evidence on the feasibility of the scheme.

The Alberta propositions are different from most of those advanced in other countries. With us we desire to bring water and land already settled, where the farmers have invested their entire fortunes in buildings, stock and implements. It is not a question of reclaiming land by irrigation and then campaigning to get people upon it rather it is a scheme to retain the settlers and enable them to produce wealth by bringing water which is available to them. The suggestion that has been made to remove people out of the drought areas, leaving behind them their investments in farm implements, without any effort to provide a solution of the drought problem, is ridiculous. When experts tell us that there is water for much of the land and when experience proves that irrigated land can produce more great and more steadily than dry land, there is no reason why it should not be availed of to the fullest extent.

What Southern Alberta needs is mixed farming and it can only obtain it in most if its area, through irrigation. Irrigation provides the hay and the pasture for the maintenance of livestock. Mixed farming enables the soil to be enriched rather than to be depleted in value.

Sound business sense is with the movement for irrigation development. A system that will make dry land worth five times as much as it is today, that will make it productive every year, no matter whether there is drought or not, should be encouraged by our governments. As was pointed out in one of the addresses at the irrigation convention, an irrigated section last year produced a gross return of $54.71 an acre, while dry land alongside of it produced absolutely nothing. Surely it is good business to make unproductive land productive every year and not in wet years only.

R.S.C. CHAPTER 115

Arthur G. Peuchen hereby gives notice that he has under Section 7 of the said act deposited with the Minister of Public Works at Ottawa and in the office of the District Registrar of the Land Registry District of Calgary, Alberta, a description of the Site and the Plans of the proposed Dams and Booms to be constructed on the Old Man River for Log Storage in the North West Quarter of Section 11 and South West Quarter of Section 14, Township 9, Range 26 West 4th Meridian.

And take notice that after the expiration of one month from the date of the first publication of this notice Arthur G. company of film actors were thrilled by Guy Pulley, the head location carpenter, falling overboard. The company was taking night scenes on a sailing vessel in San Francisco Bay, when Pulley lost his balance and plunged into the water. Members of the company threw him a line, and after some maneuvering the carpenter was hauled safely back on board. He expressed himself as being rather chilled by his sudden and unexpected "dip," and explained that the plank upon which he was standing had slipped.

In James A. Herne's celebrated play many scenes are laid along the shore, for the story, it will be remembered, is situated on the coast of Maine, where the two brothers, Martin and Nathanial Berry, are the keepers of a lighthouse. It is in this lighthouse that the famous dramatic struggle between the two brothers takes place, when the ship that is bearing the daughter of Martin away with her lover is leaving the harbor.

RUSSIAN BOLSHEVIK
FORCES DEFEATED

In the severe fighting between the Poles and the Bolshevik forces that has been going on around Warsaw this past week the Russians have suffered a crushing defeat, and the Soviet army is now bottled up between the Prussian boundary and the Vistula river. The Poles have closed up every loophole of escape, and have captured such a large number of prisoners and material that it is impossible to count them. The whole situation is one of extreme peril for the Bolsheviks who seem to have no chance to escape. What effect the Polish success will have upon the Allied Council is hard to say, but it is quite evident that the Poles are impatient of any efforts to restrain their actions. The following are a few of the telegraphic messages that have come through regarding the state of affairs on the Polish front:

WARSAW, Aug. 23.—The process of bottling up the Russian Soviet forces on the northern front between Prussia and the Vistula river has been completed, according to an official statement issued just before midnight. The Poles have closed the gateway of escape, taking prisoners and materials in such quantities that it is impossible to count them.

Disaster Threatened

PARIS, Aug. 23.—Soviet Russian armies which invaded Poland and threatened to capture Warsaw appear to be on the eve of complete disaster, says the Warsaw correspondent of the Matin. He quotes Gen. Weygand as saying Poland will be the grave of three-fourths of the Bolshevik army.

Two Polish cavalry divisions are advancing toward Bialystok for the evident purpose of cutting off the retreat of Soviet troops operating to the north of Warsaw. The correspondent declares the Bolshevik will soon be forced into a hurried general retreat and that discipline has broken down in their ranks.

Cutting off Retreat

WARSAW, Aug. 23.—Polish forces Sunday night were endeavoring to cut off the retreat of four Russian Soviet armies and force them into German territory. On the extreme Polish left the Soviet cavalry was defeated and driven out of Soldau and the regions occupied by the Russians in the north Vistula area between Thorn and Plock.

Prisoners Not Counted

PARIS, Aug. 23.—The number of Russian Soviet prisoners captured in the Polish counter-offensive will amount to 75,000, according to Warsaw advices to the French foreign office today.

Most of the 35,000 prisoners already counted were captured in the territory northwest of Warsaw, including the Danzig corridor, by the army under command of the French general Bilotte, who formerly was chief of staff to General Lyautey, resident French governor of Morocco.

Another Polish army, under command of the French general Henry, is striking toward Bialystok from Warsaw, cutting off the Bolshevik retreat.

Changes Situation

WARSAW, Aug. 23.—The foreign office announcement of Saturday night that Poland would not accept the Russian Soviet terms presented to the Polish peace delegates at Minsk refers to those submitted by M. Danilovskiy, chairman of the Soviet delegation at Thursday's session of the Russo-Polish conference.

The Polish delegation's instructions were to assist upon an honorable and durable peace, and it was stated at the foreign office today that no new instructions had been sent. As rapidly as possible the Polish delegates at Minsk are being informed by wireless and otherwise of the Polish military successes, which may result in reversing the situation, or at least greatly changing the terms the Soviet delegates presented at the opening of the negotiations.

Proposals Adopted

LUCERNE, Switzerland, Aug. 23.—Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain, and Premier Gieletti, of Italy, have adopted proposals to be submitted to France for Allied action to secure Poland free and unrestricted use of Dardig and its communication in accordance with the Versailles treaty, it was announced officially here today.

HAIL INSURANCE BOARD
DOES BIG BUSINESS

The municipal Hail Insurance board has done a much larger business this year than last. The risk is also greater because not only is there a larger area insured but 80 per cent. of the insurance is at $10.00 per acre. Last year up to the 13th of August there were 1365 claims filed with the board and an estimated loss of $300,000. Up to the same date this year 1869 claims have been filed representing an estimated loss of $600,000.

The board is carrying insurance in 141 Municipal districts and has received claims for damage in 89. The districts having the largest number of claims are, Norguay 103, Rosebud 162, Little Bow 140, Wheatland 109 and Montgomery 92. To handle the volume of business there is an office staff of 17 and there are 27 adjusters in the field, and in most of the cases an adjustment is made within a week after the storm. Altogether there are 2,281,602 acres covered by insurance and the total risk is placed at approximately 20 million dollars.

The worst storm in the season so far was on July 26th, in the Municipalities of Norguay and Rosebud it began east of Castairs and covered an area of 6 miles wide and 60 miles long, a large part of the crop was totally destroyed and the total awards will probably be around $300,000. In the same day there was also a bad storm near Wetaskiwin, in the municipality of Montgomery.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS

OTTAWA, Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press)—Pleading the cause of the imprisoned Winnipeg strike leaders, a deputation headed by F. J. Dixon, leader of the Laborites in the Manitoba legislature, waited upon two members of the government yesterday afternoon. It is understood that their plea was to the effect that the recent election in Winnipeg demonstrated the people's confidence in the imprisoned men and served to show that the bulk of public opinion is behind the attitude of the men in forcing a general strike, also that few people believe the imprisoned men had any seditious intentions.

Interviewed by the Canadian Press, actually been held came as a great surprise to them.

Senator G. Robertson, labor minister admitted that the deputation waited upon him and the solicitor-general, Hon. Hugh Guthrie. Asked if he cared to make a statement, Senator Robertson said the deputation was received and laid its case before the two ministers who will discuss it with their cabinet colleagues.

Friends of the imprisoned men here believe that there is every prospect of an early release of the men.

A singular fact in connection with the visit of the deputation is that neither the prime minister's office, nor the department of justice knew of the conference being held and the announcement that a conference had LONDON.—The present Bolshevik-Polish crisis presages a general shake-up of the world's oil industry generally, according to president Steele, of the Steele Oil Exporting Company. Mr. Steele is in Europe making an exhaustive survey of the oil situation.

Britain's probable resumption of trade with Russia, while the United States stands aloof, means that Britain may see her way clear to open extensive oil fields in Persia and Mesopotamia later. America is now supplying nearly all the oil and gasoline requirements of Europe, but with the British entering the Asian fields it will mean the flooding of Europe with English oil. This out-cutting of America, I do not think will result in any great reduction in the price of oil in the United States, but means considerable more supplies. I understand the English oil fields in Persia are practically ready for operation as soon as the Bolshevik menace is removed.

Oil wells are already equipped. At Baku a different situation prevails because the equipment of most mines has been destroyed and it will take time to get them working. Reports that American oil resources are being exhausted, is not ill-founded. Therefore, this relief to the American industry from Europe is not without good effects. Even now we are commencing to look to Canada for an oil supply. I understand there are rich potential fields in Canada. The Canadian government is realizing its great future value and are taking effective measures against American control.

SMALL DEMAND FOR FALL RYE

Farmers of Southern Alberta have not answered the call to plant fall rye, through government assistance, in as large numbers as was expected. The Lethbridge bureau of the provincial department of agriculture has not been as busy as officials thought it would be.

Mr. A. W. Murphy, who was stationed here for some time, returned to Edmonton yesterday to resume his duties in that city. Mr. Slack is still touring the country and will be back in Lethbridge on Friday, it is expected, and Mr. Jack Weir is holding down the office in the city. Personally Mr. Weir has issued applications for 175 bushels.

Does Advertising Pay? It certainly does in a live progressive town. But we have lost our old time Western vigor and ceased to be lively. We were continually kept on the go in the glorious old times of long ago. Instead of the western vim it is the good old-fashioned eastern apathy. When the blood went coursing through our veins to the tune of the Bull teams of twenty head with the wheels crunching into the gravel making ruts that a child could not step across. The permit system was in full blast. You could then get liquor absolutely pure and of guaranteed age, which you can't do even with a Doctor's permit, honored by a paternal government. Poker games were in full blast night and day, dances every night. If you wanted a subscription list for an emergency, sickness or burial, you had only to go to the card tables and they would pass you the chips. The 4th of July was the principal day kept, everyone strove to get a permit, but the brand was so pure that you never felt the effects if it the next day. Old "Smiler," the blacksmith, had a shop on the main street and at 3 o'clock on the glorious fourth he would swing his hammer on the anvil making the most penetrating sound conceivable, shouting "come and smile, this is our day."

Does Advertising Pay? We will answer the query next week.

THE RISE OF MEIGHEN

(Continued from Page Three) put in the open and looked for the job that is supposed to look for the man—you may be asking what manner of man he is. He is small and spare and splits the air even as he is accused of splitting hairs. He has an almost saturnine countenance. He is merciless in debate and, like most others of that ilk, is very sensitive to criticism. And yet withal he is human and has many characteristics that win him friends. Those who know him best like him most and his head has not been turned by his rather meteoric flight to the seats of the mighty. Though Manitoba claims him for her own, even if she may perchance refuse to re-elect him, he is originally from Ontario. He was born in the old stone town of St. Marys, of poor but honest parents, and the daily papers are still boasting the bread his mother bakes. He took the royal road to political greatness—from the law school to the law practices and thence by easy stages the head of the law factory. He knows little of men and less of the science of politics. Amusing tales are told of how that Professor of Politics, smiling James Calder, worked on his credulity. And right here it might be noted that Mr. Meighen is a bad forgetter, as Hon. James and others in the Cabinet may sooner or later discover. Just at present they are his honored colleagues. When the time comes that he can dispense with their services there will be a neat row of scalps hanging in a certain wigwam, while a yelping lot of statesmen will be feeling for their hair.

Will He Recognize

And it may not be very long till that time arrives either. For Hon. Arthur realizes that his party must be re-organized beneath the shades of Opposition. Also he must know that his peculiar gifts fit him for leader of the Opposition rather than for leader of the government. In fact he has been heard to remark jocularly that he was not a candidate for the Premiership but for leader of the Opposition. Moreover he is a more or less humble individual, to whom $14,000 per year as leader of the Opposition looks ample for light housekeeping. So should his Cabinet colleagues fail to respond promptly to the crack of his whip he may at any moment throw them to the wolves, or in other words the elections, and start laying the foundations of his new household. In truth the turn of the wheel has given Hon. Arthur the whip hand over his enemies and there is not too much of the milk of human kindness coursing through his veins to keep him from wielding it somewhat mercilessly.

From the foregoing you may gather some idea of the young Premier—he is the youngest Premier the British Empire has produced since the days of the younger Pitt, for he is in his 45th year. To sum up he is a fighter and so fond of debate that he sometimes gets into an argument with himself. He is ambitious enough to attempt to rule a hostile people with the aid of a hostile Cabinet. He is a protectionist from the free trade West and protectionist Quebec extends to him an even more generous measure of hatred than it gave to Sir Robert Borden. His reputation as the defender of the indefensible in the House has not endeared him to the rest of the country. This government he leads have no future, but Hon. Arthur fondly believes that he personally has.

The Day of Young Leaders
With these few words we may leave the Premier to his troubles, only pausing to further remark that Hon. C. Ballantyne, who threatened to be the first to get out, was the first to be sworn in. Also to further point out that Hon. Arthur has no monopoly of these troubles which play so large a part in the lives of public men. Hon. Mackenzie King has a few of his own, while there are enough left over to keep Hon. T. A. Crerar from getting lonesome.

And the mention of these great men recalls that Canada is no longer looking to her old statesmen for counsel. Mr. Meighen is a young man as politicians go. The Liberal leader is but a year older. Hon. T. A. Crerar is the youngest of the three, only forty-three years having passed over his head. With three youthful gladiators in the ring one would naturally look for lively times in Parliament. But if trouble comes it will bear the brand of the Meighen. Otherwise here must be a great reversal of form.

Hon. Mackenzie King spent the session dodging trouble. He made a lot of noise over unimportant trifles and either kept his mouth shut or dealt in ambiguous terms with the more important issues. The net result was that the Unionists, as they still must be called owing to the high cost of paper and the extravagance of the new name, treat him with good-natured contempt. The most important thing that has happened to him is that he has been taken into Hon. Jacques Bureau's political stable. In this connection it might be well to point out that in Hon. Jacques the Liberal party has found a new boss. The merry little Frenchman from Three Rivers packs quite a bundle of guile beneath his smiling exterior. He trained Ernest Lapointe, planted him in Laurier's constituency and made him the acknowledged leader of the Frenchmen in Federal circles. It has become a by-word at Ottawa. "If you want anything from the Frenchmen, you'll have to see Jacques."

The man who can swing the French.

men carries the Opposition in the hollow of his hand. Hon. Mackenzie King has taken time off from preparing set speeches to learn this much. So he is already halter broke. It was indeed funny to see Hon. Jacques steering his leader during the debates on the Shipbuilding Bill and the increased indemnities. Jacques was for both measures, heart and soul. Mr. King would have gone against both, but his new boss sat in with him, kept him entirely out of the shipbuilding dispute and only let him go far enough against the larger pay envelope to make his attack look like the poorest kind of camouflage. As a matter of fact the new boss does not appear anxious to put Mr. King in well with the people, and it looks more and more as if Quebec would come back to a new Parliament as one of the largest groups and that its leader would not be Mackenzie King but Ernest Lapointe.

As for Hon. T. A. Crerar he was out of the House for most of the session through illness. When he came back he played more or less the part of a spectator. This gave ground for suspicion that he is too decent a fellow to make a good politician. But this may be an under-estimation. With the government making enemies at every turn and the Opposition overlooking all opportunities to gather them into the fold the Farmer leader may have been wise enough to realize that all he had to was to sit still and let things happen. Anyway they did happen and are happening. He appears to be one of those lucky, or unlucky, individuals whom Providence has picked for high places. For such there is no escape.

Take the latest developments in Quebec for example. When Guion went out and Taschereau came in Sir Charles Fitzpatrick practically secured control of provincial affairs in the Lower province. Master of political intrigues Sir Charles may be, but he is no favorite with the Habitants. Moreover, there is down there a Minister of Agriculture named Caron who is reputed to be the ablest and most ambitious man in the Quebec Cabinet. There are those who know Quebec well who predict that Mr. Caron will pull steadily under Fitzpatrick-Taschereau guidance and that he may at any moment step out and form a little Farmer party of his own. If he does look out for squalls that will blow Hon. T. A. Crerar nearer and yet nearer to the Premiership. Caron stands well with his countrymen and with himself. It might be well to keep an eye on him. He may at any time make a move that will settle once for all the argument over which is to be the largest group in the Parliament following the general election that cannot much longer be postponed.

BANDITS MEMBERS OF A BOLSHEVIK GANG

Through the shooting of Akroff and the arresting of Tom Bassoff the police have, it is believed, broken up an important factor of a large international gang of crooks composed of foreigners of bolshevik tendencies. That the headquarters of this gang has been in Great Falls has been established beyond a doubt.

At the present time some members of the gang are resting in jail in Great Falls. In a letter received by Chief of Police Gillespie from the police at Great Falls it is apparent that Tom and Alex Bassoff were in close touch with the gang in Great Falls before their last trip to Canada but so far the Great Falls police have not uncovered any of the plans for operation in Canada.

Whether Bassoff brothers came back to Canada as emissaries in the Bolshevik movement throughout the mines and lumber camps of southern Alberta and in the B.C. side of the Crow country can only be guessed at but it is known for a fact that the Bassoff brothers, with other members of this gang in Great Falls held secret meetings.

This information is in the hands of Chief of Police Gillespie. The Great Falls police however, were unable to learn what was being discussed at these meetings as the meetings were so closely guarded. The Bassoffs stayed at the James hotel and also in the Avron block while residing in Great Falls. While there they were in communication with Harry Toman at Lethbridge and Toman repeatedly sent letters to them.

With Jack Hanoff, Tom and Alex Bassoff left for Canada on July 20 of this year. From then on their movements are known to the police in Alberta.

Another affair that is attributed to Great Falls is the belief that the bandits purchased their Mauser guns in that city. It is known that this make is not sold in stores in Lethbridge, and it is practically sure that no returned soldier sold the guns to them. It has been stated that these guns can be purchased in Great Falls for about twenty dollars.

Tom Bassoff is now resting at the jail farm and if Inspector Risk's recommendations are followed out he will be closely guarded. Bassoff is a husky man and as he has been receiving good food since arrested in Pincher and as his physical condition has answered remarkably well. Inspector Risk believes that all precautions should be taken with the man.

His finger prints and measurements have been taken and Inspector Risk, of the A.P.P. will send considerable information to the police at Great Falls to learn if Bassoff has been in trouble there.—Lethbridge Herald.

THE RIGHT SHEET

At the corner of a New York street a tall man stood with a map in his hand, at which he gazed with a puzzled air. A kindly passerby tapped his shoulder and offered to direct him, upon which the man with the map smiled showing several gold teeth as a result.

"I reckoned I'd figured it out pretty well, he said, "with this little old map, but I seem kinder beat."

"Yes," said the other soothingly, "I dare say you'd have managed very well. But you're looking at a map of Chicago."

NORMAL SCHOOL STUDENTS ARE ENROLLING RAPIDLY

HIGHER SALARIES, GOVERNMENT LOANS AND BETTER LIVING CONDITIONS FOR TEACHERS ARE PROVING ATTRACTIVE

The Minister of Education states that, in spite of the large number of failures at the recent examinations, prospects are bright for full classes at all three Provincial Normal Schools. Many who passed the examinations and who had not previously intimated their intention of attending Normal School, have changed their plans and are applying for admission. Already more than two hundred and fifty (250) fully qualified students have made application.

Teaching Is More Attractive

The higher salaries now being paid to teachers, the larger number of attractive positions being offered in consolidated and two-room schools and in high school work, and the better living conditions offered by teachers' residences, of which there are now 250 in the province, are having their effect. The Government loan to cover the cost of Normal School training is also proving the deciding factor in many cases.

THE WHEAT SITUATION IN EUROPE

From information now being received it becomes more and more evident that there is a general shortage in the world's supply of wheat, elsewhere we refer to the condition of things in England and now there comes the report of the food situation in Italy which is furnished by Bradstreet's agency. "Grave statements concerning Italy's food position were made in the Italian Chamber, July 30, by Signor Soleri, Food Commissioner. The harvest was disappointing, he reported, and despite requisitioning there would be only 12,000,000 instead of the 40,000,000 quintals of wheat it had been hoped to obtain. To meet the needs of the population, the commissioner explained, Italy would be required to purchase abroad about 30,000,000 quintals. He added that as Argentina and India had placed embargoes on wheat exports, it was very doubtful whether Italy could obtain her requirements. Signor Soleri announced that Italy had proposed, and Premier Lloyd George consented, to call a conference to discuss the problem with a view to assuring Europe's bread supply. He concluded by saying: "The entire truth must be told, which is that the present crisis is the gravest that Italy had to endure. It can only be surmounted by a spirit of sacrifice and discipline."

Following this is the report from France, which is as follows:

"The wheat question, in spite of excellent harvest prospects, is causing renewed anxiety in France, according to the London Economist's Paris letter. The normal wheat consumption of France is estimated at 80,000,000 quintals, whereas the total yield of home-grown wheat is only 68,000,000 quintals. This means, after the deduction of 8,000,000 quintals for seed, a deficit of 20,000,000 quintals which must be met by imports. If the whole of this quantity has to be purchased from abroad, the balance of trade against France will necessarily be increased to the extent of some 4,000,000 francs, with a subsequent increase in the cost of living."

This condition of things, of course, will create a demand for every bushel of wheat Canada can produce, not only this year but for some years to come consequently the price of wheat cannot decline very much, unless speculators can get control of the market and force down the price to their own advantage. The continuance of the Wheat Board would have prevented this and would have assured to both the consumer and the producer an equitable price. The farmer would have got the full value for his wheat on the one hand, and the consumer consumer would, on the other hand, have been able to procure his flour almost at the cost of production. Any way the government will do well to keep a close eye upon the market and be ready to prevent any handling of the market on the part of speculators that will in any way increase the price of flour to the hungry millions of Europe who so badly need it.

The open air services on Sunday evening on the parsonage lawn of the Methodist Church continue to grow in favor. The people seem to appreciate the idea of worshipping with nature's surroundings, rather than in broil of a close hot building. The green grass, the shade of the trees and the whisper of the leaves, the smell of the flowers, the play of the lawn fountain, all make a strong appeal to worship. On the hot summer evenings. The solo by Mrs. C. Brewster gave added thrills to the enjoyment of the service. If the evenings remain hot the services will be continued throughout August.

FAMOUS HERD DISPERSED

Following the recent death of the noted cattle breeder, Mossom Boyd, near Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, Canada, there were dispersed at the estate sale one of the most remarkable herds of cattle ever assembled in America. The historic herd of Polled Herefords belonging to Mr. Boyd was one of the original sources of that breed in this country. He and B. O. Gamon, of Des Moines, Iowa, were believers in Mendelian theory of heredity, and in 1898 began the experiment of producing a variety of hornless Herefords. Four years later a thorough search among 2,400 breeders revealed four young bulls which, by a natural freak, had been born without horns.

Two of these freaks were purchased by Mr. Gamon and the other two by Mossom Boyd. These four animals became the ancestors of all the Polled Herefords in the world. Bred to horned Hereford cows, true to the Mendelian law, a part of their progeny proved to be hornless; and by breeding solely from these hornless ones a completely hornless breed was developed. There were 500 head of this remarkable breed on the Boyd farm on the Canadian National Railways near Prince Albert.

At the first auction sale of these new cattle held by Mr. Boyd at Kankakee, Ill., in 1907, breeders were afraid to offer high prices for fear the strange type would not produce truly. But on the continued success of the originator of the breed the Polled Herefords became as standardized as Polled Angus. Their popularity was increased by a show herd exhibited at many fairs in Canada and the United States. In 1914 the bull Bullion IV won the grand championship of Canada.—Lethbridge Herald.

Betty Thorndike, whose father, the principal owner of a rich diamond mine in South Africa, has sent her to America to be educated. Upon his mysterious disappearance a tremendous reward is offered for the return of the girl to South Africa. The publication of the reward attracts a band of crooks who make repeated attempts to kidnap her. Another criminal attracted by the disappearance of her father is a part owner of the mine who attempts her murder.

Consuming interest marks the progress of the story, each chapter closing with an incident well calculated to maintain the popularity of the story as a whole.
